

Two Churches, One Marriage

Learning to Manage Religious Differences

Introduction

One of the most important things that interchurch couples need to learn is how to deal with religious differences. If not properly managed, religious differences can become a source of conflict and tension within the relationship. If properly managed, however, religious differences can become a catalyst for growth. This unit, therefore, examines constructive ways to work with religious differences that will enrich rather than divide you as a couple.