

Patron Suggestion

Please post clear no talking signs in center corridor at LRC. The area echoes terribly throughout entire LRC; and worse yet it appears many believe they may talk in a full voice there due to the confusing cell phone notices posted in the corridor.

LRC Response

February 21, 2007

In the past, No Talking signs have been vetoed because of the belief that they soon become “invisible” to library habitués and are then ignored by those who forget their library etiquette. As a compromise, we had a large “silence Is Golden” banner made, and we put it up during finals and bar study periods and then take it down, hoping that it will make more of an impression that way.

However, you raise a good point about mixed and confusing messages, and I think we need to at least revisit the issue. We’ll brainstorm ideas for noise control in the atrium, so stay tuned!
