

PATRON SUGGESTION

July 16, 2008

When one studier visits another studier at a study carrel he immediately rests his hand and leans against the top corner of the carrel's side. Over the years each and every major carrel has accumulated a black grime from this action. The grime is sticky and disgusting. Also, there is more black grime where a studier's stomach meets the carrel. All the grime is repulsive. Can we ask maintenance to clean these areas on the carrels?

Thanks, LRC Local

Thanks for letting us know. While this has accumulated, as you say, "over the years," it is not something that will be wiped away in short order. It sounds like a big job, and one we will pass along to the maintenance people to put on their to-do list.
