Students empowering our changemakers

Over 2,000 USD undergraduate and graduate students engaged with the community through an academic service-learning component in their classes throughout the 2012-2013 academic year.

Every student contributes and grows through their service-learning experiences in profound ways. Much of the credit for the success of their experiences in the community goes to our outstanding student leaders. Over 25 site coordinators and 18 course-based student leaders participated in ongoing training and advising from the CSL staff to develop their skills, reflect on their ideas about social change, and to feel empowered to strengthen and grow our programs with their own ideas and passions.

Student leaders boldly took up their role as university-community liaisons by engaging our student participants in the following ways:

- facilitating thoughtful reflection
- authentic relationship building
- looking at systemic causes to local issues
- staying tethered to their purpose
- asking the difficult questions
- unpacking the role of power and privilege
- thinking critically and compassionately

We are thrilled to support all of our student participants and student leaders in the many ways they shape and guide our work.
