Honoring 2008 Arts and Philosophy Recipient
Charles Margrave Taylor, Ph.D., PHILOSOPHER

(Canada, born 1931)

“Democracy and Exclusion: The Darker Side of Political Identity”

*With response by Robert Bellah, Ph.D.,
Professor Emeritus, UC Berkeley*

Taylor will discuss how democracy generates pressures toward exclusion as well as inclusion. In a democracy, being in the majority has decisive importance, so a society is forced to define a collective identity to which a majority can subscribe. What happens to those whose difference threatens the dominant identity – immigrants, cultural minorities, or those who cherish a non-standard version of the dominant identity?
