College/School: School of Leadership & Education Science

Assessment Overview
We assess six learning outcomes on the two-year cycle of the M.Ed. in TESOL, Literacy, & Culture Program, within the Department of Learning and Teaching, housed in the School of Leadership and Education Sciences. Candidates are assessed using a cultural immersion project, group projects, final projects on teaching English as an international language, 50 hours of practicum work at local community colleges and local language schools, weekly reflection journals, capstone research projects in respective sociocultural settings, a linguistic case study, lesson designs based on student needs within respective contexts, and an Action Research project.

Results & Actions
The majority of our students are successful in the program. For students who are unable to meet the rigor of academic writing requirements for the courses, we work individually with them using an individualized plan and explicit consequences. For the international students, we have implemented a peer review process and instructions for how to make better use of the writing center.
